New congressional representative for 23rd district visits El Paso County

Courier Staff Reports

EL PASO COUNTY — After visiting with elected officials and community leaders in El Paso, Clint, Fabens and Horizon City on Monday, Feb. 19, Congressman Ciro D. Rodríguez continued his tour of the 23rd congressional district on Tuesday, Feb. 20 with an early morning meeting in Sierra Blanca followed by Van Horn, Marfa and Fort Davis.

"As I travel throughout the 23rd congressional district, it is clear that my constituents in west Texas are ready for a new direction and want to see their leaders work together to get things done. That is why I am listening carefully to what Texans want their representatives and their congress to focus on," Rodríguez said.

Congressman Rodríguez has committed to visiting all 20 counties at least once every quarter during his first year as representative of the 23rd district.

While visiting in Clint, Rodríguez invited community leaders to breakfast at the Hilltop Cafe for a question/answer session. Clint mayor, Dale Reinhardt, was asked by Rodríguez to put forward the concerns of the area. The topics covered were water and sewer, the construction of homes on viable farmland, health concerns of veterans and elderly, and education.

WHAT ARE YOUR ISSUES — When asked by Ciro Rodríguez, Clint mayor, Dale Reinhardt (right) responded with a list including: water, sewer, farms, healthcare, the elderly and veterans.

Currently there are 2,500 people in Clint with water connections but no sewer. Mario Aguilar, general manager for the Lower Valley Water District (LVWD) said that 80 percent of the homes are using cesspools. The schools have a sewer line.

He added that the LWVD is in the process of funding a program to provide first time sewer connections to its customers. The project will cost about $7.5 million. The money is coming from two sources. USDA Rural Development grants will provide $4 million and the other $3.5 million will come in the form of loans from the Water Development Board.

Reinhardt pointed out that the sewer project would have a positive impact on all the other items up for discussion.

Illegal dumping of trash and tires in the desert was also discussed.

Rodríguez opened the meeting with a brief overview of his first weeks in Washington.

Socorro notary public convicted of deceptive business practices

By Elhiu Dominguez

Special to the Courier

EL PASO COUNTY — A Socorro notary public accused of engaging in deceptive business practices pleaded guilty to one count of engaging in Deceptive Business Practices by offering to provide immigration services to consumers in violation of Texas law.

Patricia Monroy, doing business as M&N Business Management Services, pled out on Friday, Feb. 16. The hearing took place at the County Criminal Court at Law #2.

After receiving the guilty plea from Monroy, Judge Robert Anchondo sentenced her to one year probation and to serve 100 hours of community service. She was also ordered to pay $5,449 restitution to the four victimized consumers. Additionally Judge Anchondo ordered her to strictly comply with the terms of the settlement in a separate civil lawsuit filed against her by the Texas Attorney General's Office for soliciting the preparation of immigration documents. The civil lawsuit identifies 16 other individuals who were victimized by the defendant. The settlement orders her to make full restitution to all the victims.

Patricia Monroy

County Attorney Jose R. Rodríguez expressed satisfaction about the sentence. "Ms. Monroy took money from hard working immigrants promising them to perform services that were never rendered. This case must serve as an example to other notary publics who might be tempted to take advantage of the good will of immigrant families. In Texas, it is illegal for notary publics to do any immigration work. Notaries are not lawyers, and they should not even offer to fill out of immigration forms. I am committed to prosecute violators to the fullest extent of the law."

Convert to digital or lose ability to watch TV by 2009

By Shermaze Ingram
Special to the Courier

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The deadline for television broadcasters to complete the transition from analog to digital television (DTV) is only two years away. But while the vast majority of television stations nationwide are already broadcasting in digital, the majority of Americans are completely unaware of the federally mandated transition, according to research by the National Association of Broadcasters.

Broadcasters have been preparing for the transition to digital television since the late 1990s, when they began building digital facilities and airing digital channels alongside regular analog broadcasts. Today, more than 1,500 television stations nationwide offer digital programming. In Texas, 121 high-power television stations out of 133 are already broadcasting in digital.

But while television stations are successfully making the transition, consumers remain unaware. According to research commissioned by the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB), 62 percent of consumers have "seen, read or heard nothing" about the DTV transition, and only four percent of respondents were able to identify 2009 as the year the transition would occur.

To increase consumer awareness of the Feb. 17, 2009 transition to digital television, the NAB has hired a four-person digital television transition team that will spearhead a national campaign to help consumers prepare for the transition. "We're running our consumer awareness campaign like a political campaign, with a great candidate in DTV and an election on Feb. 17, 2009," said Jonathan Collegio, vice president of the NAB's DTV transition team. "Unfortunately, our candidate has very little name ID. Our goal is to ensure that every American knows about the DTV transition and that no consumer loses television reception in 2009 due to a lack of information about the switchover."

More than 34 million households receive over-the-air television signals in their homes and will be affected by the end of analog broadcasting on Feb. 17, 2009. Consumers who receive free, over-the-air broadcasting exclusively on analog sets will have three options for continuing their television service:

- Purchase a set-top converter box that will convert the digital signal into analog for an existing television set;
- Purchase a new television set with a built-in-digital tuner; or
- Subscribe to cable, satellite or a telephone company television service provider.

Congress has appropriated up to $1.5 billion to be spent on a coupon program for consumers who choose the option of purchasing converter boxes. The program is being administered by the U.S. Department of Commerce, and beginning Jan. 1, 2008, households will be able to request up to two coupons valued at $40 each to go toward the purchase of a single set-top converter box.

A word of warning

“They don’t fly and they can’t swim.”

These were helpful hints offered when we purchased cell phones and it has held true. I’ve also found they don’t like lemonade, even if it’s a tiny drop.

Right after my daughter got her first cell phone, she dropped it on the unyielding tiles of the school hallway. It didn’t fly. It landed with a solid thud and promptly treated her to a flat gray screen for a few minutes. After frantic begging and thumping, it came back to life, but that phone, also, has developed personality quirks that aren’t stock to the model.

Cell phones certainly don’t like to swim. A friend of mine recently bought himself an all-bells-and-whistles-included PDA. How happy he was, with all that technology at his fingertips.

The first day he had it, he proudly showed me all its special features. A few minutes later, on break from class, he made a trip to the bathroom. He returned with a stricken look on his face and began dismantling his new toy, frantically dabbing at the parts with a paper towel.

“What on earth are you doing?” I asked, astonished.

“I dropped it in the pot,” he said sadly.

It started working later — he didn’t mention if he had to give it CPR — but from that time forward it had strange little quirks he couldn’t explain.

At least he didn’t try what one cell phone label warned against: “Don’t try to dry your cell phone in the microwave.”

would know better. But like the fellow at the cell phone store who gave us helpful hints about what cell phones can and cannot do, it seems that Americans need all sorts of instructions to keep them from using products in ways they were clearly never intended to be used.

Or maybe it’s just a vain attempt to keep consumers from suing companies should their common sense take a leave of absence.

I was recently reading about an anti-lawsuit group out of Detroit, Michigan which sponsors the Wacky Warning Label Contest. Every year they gather the strangest, most absurd labels written and posted by manufacturers — a humorous illustration of just how weird warning labels can get in a vain attempt to cover all the legal bases.

Many of the strangest labels involve our kids.

Now, you’d think if we went to all that trouble to birth ‘em, feed ‘em and protect ‘em we’d be careful where we put them. Or not.

Top winner in this year’s contest was posted on the door of a front-loading washing machine. It read: “DO NOT put any person in this washer.”

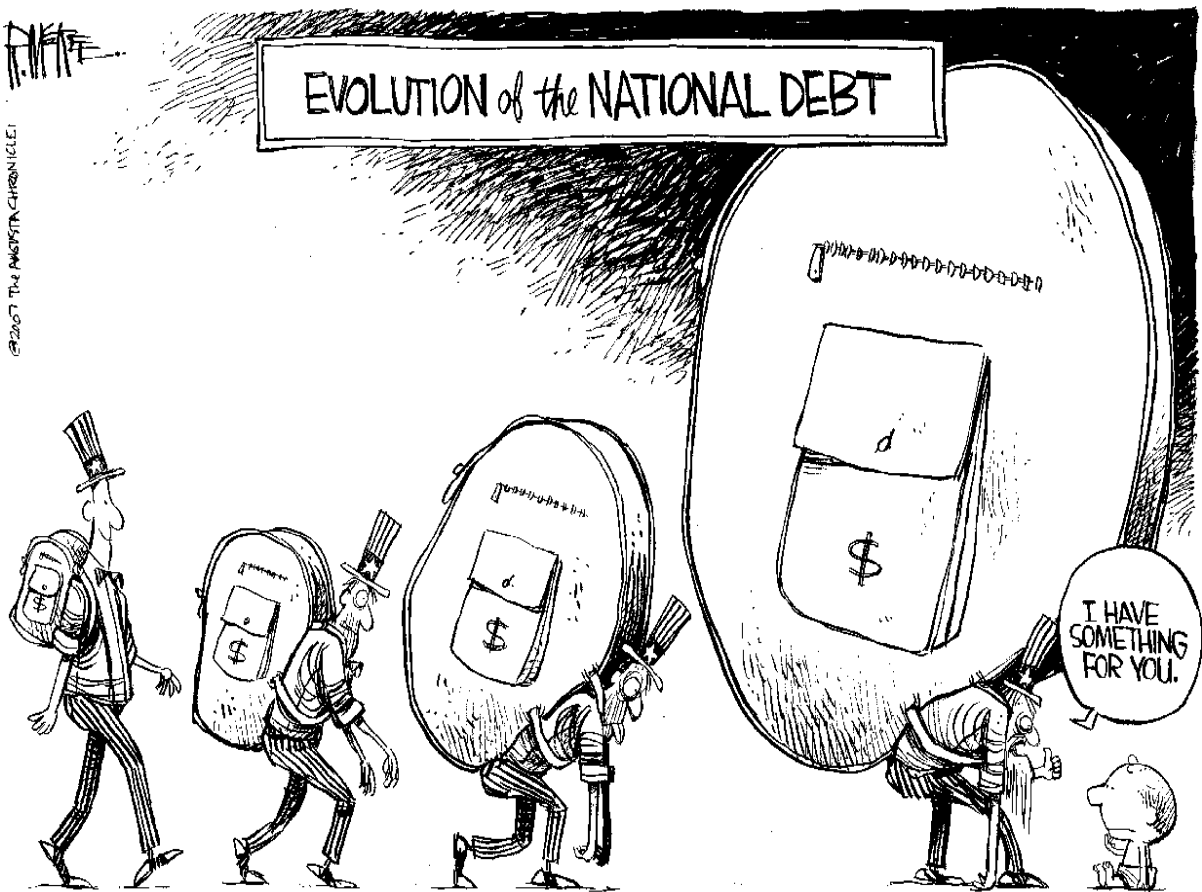

Apparently, someone had.

Robert B. Dorigo Jones, president of the Michigan Lawsuit Abuse Watch which sponsors the contest has written a book with a title that includes the warning: “Remove child before folding.”

Another winner in the contest was this enlightened instruction found on a personal watercraft: “Never use a lit match or open flame to check fuel level.”

Legislature must empower Texas crime victims

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit recently overturned a murder conviction — solely because the victim’s brother sat in the courtroom wearing a small pin with a photo of the victim on it.

Fortunately, a December decision by the U.S. Supreme Court reversed this miscarriage of justice and reinstated the conviction. But this case, Carey v. Musladin, demonstrates how victims have been marginalized from not only the courtroom, but the entire criminal justice system.

The 80th Texas Legislature should act to restore the primacy of victims.

First, restitution must be more than an empty promise. Only one-third of restitution owed to crime victims is actually collected. House Corrections Committee Chairman Jerry Madden (R-Plano) is filing a constitutional amendment to allow Texas judges to order the garnishment of an offender’s wages to pay restitution. Currently, the Texas Constitution only permits garnishment for child support, but restitution to crime victims is equally important.

Texas can also strengthen restitution for crime victims by linking the funding of probation departments to their restitution collections. Not all departments report their collections to the state.

The Texas Public Policy Foundation, based on our research, has recommended to the Corrections Committee that five percent of basic adult probation funding be tied to restitution collections so that departments receive 9.4 cents for every dollar in restitution they collect. Such performance-based funding will encourage departments to maximize their efforts in collecting restitution, which should include assisting offenders with finding work and effectively managing their finances.

However, victims cannot drink from a well that is dry, and inmates earn no money to pay restitution. The Legislature should promote the availability of victim-offender mediation as a voluntary alternative to traditional prosecution and incarceration in cases involving minor property offenses by first-time offenders.

Such mediations result in a written agreement that typically requires restitution, community service, and counseling, which is then ratified by the prosecutor or judge. Failure to comply subjects the offender to traditional prosecution and, if necessary, incarceration.

Victim-offender mediation results in improved restitution collection, better offender outcomes, and reduced costs. There are more than 300 such programs in North America and their success is well documented. Some 95 percent of cases mediated result in a written agreement, and 90 percent of these restitution agreements are completed within one year, giving victims a sense of closure.

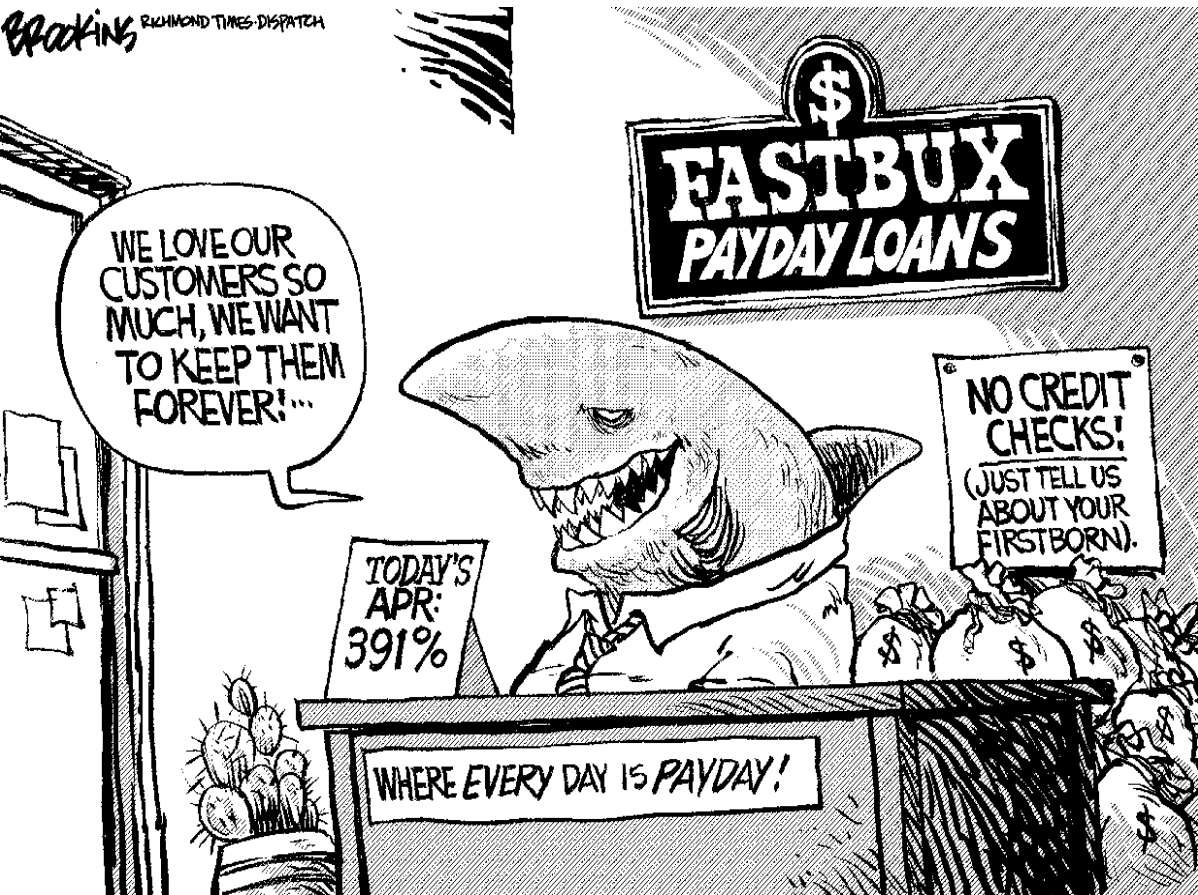

This indicates that coming face-to-face with a victim instills a moral obligation in many offenders. And because completion of the agreement avoids a conviction, offenders are more likely to hold a job that enables them to pay restitution. Victim-offender mediation has also been found to reduce recidivism by 32 percent.

Furthermore, mediations cost $250 per case, a fraction of the cost of court warning: "Do not iron."

The publishers of a phone book directory — or maybe their lawyers — thought to print this on their cover: "Please do not use this directory while operating a moving vehicle."

With all these warning signs needed to keep Americans from doing things they shouldn't with simple manufactured items, it only follows that perhaps we should extend these kinds of instructions to more serious sides of life.

A few might include: "Do not apply for this credit card if you are not experienced in the handling of money."

Or: "Do not become pregnant until you are mature enough to raise a kid."

Or maybe: "Do not sign this marriage license until you have consulted at least five grown-ups who care deeply about what happens to you."

Of course, these instructions aren't commonly seen for logical reasons. For one, where would you post them? Never mind, don't answer that. Secondly, when people misuse their lives, who can they sue?

Maybe the anti-lawsuit group should post their ultimate personal responsibility signs on every bathroom mirror so we can see it first thing in the morning.

It should read: "The buck stops here."

Empower

proceedings, let alone incarceration. The state could impose an offender fee paid by property offenders upon conviction or a participant fee for offenders who choose victim-offender mediation that would cover the up front cost of grants to local district attorney's offices for such programs.

Victim-offender mediation is not for everyone, but many victims of minor property offenses primarily want answers, an apology, and restitution — all of which only the defendant can provide. Victims deserve this option in such cases and studies suggest 60 to 70 percent would choose it.

Finally, Texas must ensure that restitution and other priorities of victims are fully incorporated in sentencing. Plea bargaining accounts for 90 percent of sentences, but Texas is not among the 22 states that require prosecutors to obtain the victim's opinion concerning a proposed plea.

Arizona requires prosecutors to consult with victims, guarantees victims the right to be present and heard during any settlement discussions, and requires that judges consider the victim's viewpoint in deciding whether to accept the plea. Texas law only says the judge must "inquire as to whether a victim impact statement has been returned."

We must not view crime as simply an offense against the state, and instead ensure that crime victims have a place in the courtroom and a seat at the table. The marginalization of victims is not only unjust, but deprives us of the public safety benefits that are only realized when an offender's conscience is awakened upon realizing the harm caused to another human being.

CANUTILLO — Nine Canutillo HS students qualified to advance to state finals after taking top honors in various business contests during the regional Future Business Leaders of America (FBLA) area competition held recently at Del Valle High School.

CHS first place finishers were Miriam Garcia, Richard Sifuentes, Christy Cereceres, Carlos Carrasco, Andrea Figueroa, Desmond Sapien. Second place qualifier is Eddie Estrada, and third place qualifiers are Stephanie Montoya and Melodie Armendariz.

Almost 300 students from area school districts participated in the competition that qualified high school students to advance and represent the El Paso area in the FBLA State Conference. This year’s state conference will be held March 8-10 at the Abraham Chavez Theater in El Paso.

“The opportunity to meet and compete against other students from across the state is a great opportunity and a stepping stone for my students to qualify for Nationals,” said Carmen Guzman, CHS Business teacher and FBLA advisor.

Hardaway’s future uncertain after radio show tirade

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

There are people in this world who are great at multi-tasking, guys who are very good at several things at once. And then there are guys who should just stick to what they know and end it there.

Here’s an example.

Put a basketball in the hands of former UTEP star Tim Hardaway and you’ve got one of the best basketball players in NBA history.

Put a microphone in front of his face — not quite as good.

After last week’s declaration on a sports radio talk show by Hardaway that he hates gay people, you have to ask yourself a very important question — what the heck was he thinking, or drinking?

Hardaway made the biggest mistake of his life by uttering how he felt about gay people. He said that he hated them, that he wouldn’t want to play with them and that there was no place for them in the world and the United States.

Now it’s bad enough to feel hatred for a group of people, but to lack self-control and express it openly to the world is downright idiotic.

Hardaway’s bitter words were played in every news, entertainment and political show in America last week. Though Hardaway later apologized, his good name was tarnished forever in about four short minutes.

But his were not the only ridiculous words uttered last week.

Let’s not be fooled by the words of NBA Commissioner David Stern, who spoke soon after Hardaway’s incident. Stern said that Hardaway would not be allowed to participate in any NBA events because the league could not be connected with his kind of attitude.

Stern said there was no room in the NBA for that sort of thing.

This is where I scratch my head. I guess Stern figures it’s okay for his league to associate with guys who rape and beat woman. For guys who use and deal drugs, guys who illegally carry firearms, guys who gamble, guys who fight in the stands and guys who commit assault outside the arena. And then there are the guys who steal and guys who abuse alcohol.

C’mon, Stern, don’t take this opportunity to try to make us believe the NBA has suddenly found its moral compass.

As for Hardaway, his stupidity will follow him wherever he goes for the rest of his life.

He should have known that you don’t have to agree with everyone’s lifestyle or choices or morality, but there are intelligent and respectful ways to state that.

But the best advice I could have given Hardaway was, “for goodness sake, man, keep your dumb, bigoted comments to yourself.”

And here’s one more thing. Hardaway’s name will be up for Hall of Fame consideration in the next few years. I’m positive he can kiss that goodbye.

Family man

I’m not exactly a fan of the Philadelphia Eagles but I am a great admirer of their coach. Andy Reid has done a great job of leading the Eagles near the top of the NFL mountain.

But his priorities have taken a swift change. He’s taken a leave of absence to try his hand at another job, an even tougher job — being a parent.

Reid’s sons have made headlines recently, one for testing positive for heroine and the other for drug and weapons charges.

His 21-year-old son Britt got into trouble after he pointed a handgun at another driver after a dispute. He also lied to police, made terroristic threats and was in possession of a controlled substance.

Garrett, the 23-year-old, caused a traffic accident and tested positive for heroine.

Oh yeah, I think coach Reid should stay home for a while and tend to his family. Football is great, but football is absolutely useless without your family.

Baseball’s here

Remember when the temperatures were hovering around the freezing mark and it eventually snowed a few weeks ago? Well, baseball players reported to Major League Baseball training camp last week and that news has warmed me up just fine.

Can you believe that the baseball regular season will get underway in just six short weeks?

It’s time to start thinking about how the New York Yankees will do without slugger Gary Sheffield in the lineup. It’s time to wonder whether the Boston Red Sox acquisition of that very rich Japanese pitcher comes with a pennant.

Will the Detroit Tigers repeat their fantastic season of a year ago? Will Barry Bonds hit 22 home runs before he is indicted for perjury?

These and many other intriguing questions will be answered very soon. Hey, are you craving a bag of peanuts, too?

Will that be regular or decaf?

By Don Flood

We have good news on the doughnut news front.

Dr. Robert Bohannon, a molecular scientist with too much time on his hands, has developed a way to produce caffeinated doughnuts.

Finally!

No more trying to wake yourself up with a breakfast of coffee and decaf doughnuts.

Between the coffee and the new doughnuts, which have the same caffeine content as two cups of coffee (but which size? Tall? Grande? El Mucho Biggo Grande?), you'll be cranked up until next April.

Bohannon, in a jittery news conference where he talked way too fast, appeared fairly upbeat — having eaten two dozen of his creations that morning — but expressed regret that he wasn't able to follow through with his idea for crystal meth doughnuts. “Krispy Kreme and Dunkin’ Donuts just totally wimped out,” he screamed at the top of his lungs.

OK, that last paragraph wasn't exactly true, in the sense it was a fabrication, but who exactly was demanding caffeinated doughnuts?

It's hard enough now to pick out a dozen doughnuts. You get a few of these and a few of those and the people are waiting behind you and you haven't had any coffee yet so you can't think clearly and the pressure builds and builds and builds until you finally start choosing those nasty doughnuts that nobody eats.

They just sit and sit in the box until you have no choice but, well, to eat them anyway.

But now it's going to be worse: “Do you want regular or decaf doughnuts?”

And with all this caffeine coursing through our veins, how will America relax?

No problem. We recently got the word from Drew Barrymore.

There's nothing I find more useful in the Sunday papers than relaxation tips, especially from movie stars, who are experts at relaxation, so much so that they are continually checking into rehab to recover from their extensive relaxation activities.

Barrymore did not disappoint.

(Which is really a good thing, unless of course you're in one of those countless places where nature is yucky and filled with bugs.)

“I'll drive in Ireland and park my car and run out into the field and rip all my clothes off and just run in the wheat fields naked.”

Excellent! But what if you can't make it to Ireland's wheat fields?

Not to worry. Any field will do. In fact, if you're really hopped up on coffee and doughnuts you might want to try it on the freeway.

Also on the food and beverage news front is a report of a non-alcoholic beer made especially for dogs.

This is good news, especially if your dog serves as your designated driver.

But be warned. The doggy beer, called Kwispelbier, costs four times more than a Heineken, a pretty expensive beer; so don't serve it unless your dog is a real connoisseur.

And, if he is driving, keep some caffeinated doughnuts on hand to make sure he stays awake.

Social Security Q&A

By Ray Vigil

Q: My brother and I are both retired and get Social Security benefits. We worked side by side in the same factory for years, but he gets a higher Social Security payment. Why does he get more?

A: Unless you are twins and made exactly the same amount every year of your careers, you wouldn't get the same benefits as your brother. Social Security benefits are based on your age and your lifetime of earnings — generally the top 35 years. In order to get the same benefit as your brother, you and he must have been the same age, had the same earnings for each year and would had to have started and stopped working at the same time. To learn more about Social Security benefits, visit Social Security's website at www.socialsecurity.gov, or call us toll-free at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY 1-800-325-0778).

Q: My 3-year old son is autistic. My husband and I have been told that he may be eligible for disability benefits from Social Security. How would he qualify for benefits? My husband and I both work full time and pay Social Security taxes.

A: Social Security administers the Supplemental Security Income program (SSI) which does pay disability benefits to some children. SSI is a needs-based program, so if your family is having a hard time making ends meet, your son might qualify for a monthly SSI payment. And if he gets SSI, he might also get Medicaid coverage. The only other way your son would qualify for payments is as a dependent on either your or your husband's Social Security record. When either you or your husband retire — or if either one of you becomes disabled and begins drawing a Social Security disability payment — he could collect because he's your dependent child. To learn more, visit Social Security's website at www.socialsecurity.gov, or call us toll-free at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY 1-800-325-0778).

Q: I'm planning to move back to Puerto Rico so I can be closer to my family. I know you have to live in the United States to get SSI (Supplemental Security Income). Does Puerto Rico count, since it is a U.S. territory?

A: No, it does not. To receive SSI, you must be a resident of a state in the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Northern Mariana Islands. For more information about SSI, visit Social Security's website at www.socialsecurity.gov, or call us toll-free at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY 1-800-325-0778).

For more information on any of the questions listed above, visit our website at www.socialsecurity.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have questions you would like answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.
