MULTIPURPOSE SITES – In the prehistoric communities of Northwest Mexico and the American Southwest, caves along Sierra Madre Occidental Mountains, like the one above, were used as spaces for shelter or home. They were also used as locations where ancestors rested, where vision quests were performed, and where the walls retain the wisdom and messages of the community in the rock art.

Archaeologist explores connection between prehistoric communities

Sierra Madre and Casas Grandes focus of presentation

EL PASO COUNTY – A special presentation based on recent research of dwellings in the Sierra Madre Occidental Mountains – where prehistoric communities interacted, lived, and share experiences among themselves and with their landscapes – will be the topic of a special presentation that will be hosted by the El Paso Museum of Archaeology.

The presentation will feature guest speaker Jupiter Martinez, an archaeologist with the National Institute of Anthropology and History (INAH) in Sonora, Mexico. His talk is scheduled for 2 p.m., Saturday, April 13, at the El Paso Museum of Archaeology, 4301 Transmountain Road. The event is free and open to the public.

The special lecture, titled Evaluating Paquimé from a Sierra Madre Perspective: Communities and Complexities, is intended to address the on-going Sierra Alta de Sonora archaeological project, which focuses on sites located on the Sonora side of the Sierra Madre Occidental Mountains.

SAN ELIZARIO – For most young girls in high school, getting a haircut can be nerve-racking because they never know what the end-product will look like. For Marlene Gonzalez, a senior and Cosmetology 2 student at San Elizario High School (SEHS), cutting 14-inches of her hair was not such a big deal especially when it is for a good cause.

"When I asked my Cosmetology teacher if she could please cut my hair she was happy to do so," Gonzalez said. "As she was cutting it, she mentioned that my hair was long enough to donate it if I wanted to and I said yes."

"I am really proud of Marlene," said Erica Sanchez, Cosmetology Instructor at SEHS. "The fact that she did not hesitate to donate her hair to the organization Wigs For Kids is truly an admirable act. Her kind gesture is going to change someone else's life for the better."

Gonzalez said that even though cutting 14 inches of her hair was going to change her look completely, she knew she was going to put a smile on a young child's face.

"I am excited to know that my hair is going to make a little kid really happy," she said. "It is going to boost their self-esteem and allow them to feel better about themselves. That is why I rather donate my hair to those who need it than have it go to waste."

Gonzalez said she plans to continue donating her hair as soon as it gets long enough to do so.

agriculturalists settled in this region since at least the Casas Grandes Viejo Period (AD700-1200). He stated that recent findings indicate a larger complexity than was previously supposed due to the scarcity of land capable of producing crops.

Today, archaeologists are trying to determine what level of interaction existed between the people of the Sierra Madre and those of the Casas Grandes Valley, Martinez stated. And, although evidence suggests strong ties, there is also evidence of localized autonomy, he related.

Martinez has served as an archaeologist with the National Institute of Anthropology and History (INAH) in Sonora since 1996. He studied archaeology in Mexico City. He said that he initially wanted to become a Mayan archaeologist but that fate brought him to Northwest Mexico where he found a much more fascinating and challenging career.

His many years of research has focused primarily on prehistoric regional systems, but he has also led Mission Period projects. His latest research project focused on perishable artifacts recovered from Casas Grandes Culture cliff dwelling sites.

For more information about the upcoming presentation, contact the El Paso Archaeology Museum director Jeff Romney at (915) 212-0421or send email to romneyjk@elpasotexas.gov.

Pelosi is driving the border crisis

When historians look back to this era, they will wonder why we insisted on outsourcing our border control to a foreign country.

President Donald Trump’s threat to close down the southern border with Mexico isn’t a sign of strength, but of frustration fading into desperation.

He is reacting with understandable alarm at a spiraling migrant crisis on the border, and is looking to Mexico to address it because we are unwilling to do it on our own – not unable, unwilling.

There were more than 100,000 apprehensions at the border in March, an increase from the 76,000 in February. The numbers for both months were the highest in 10 years. The total for the fiscal year could hit a million, a historic surge completely overwhelming our capabilities.

Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen warned Congress of “the real-time dissolution of the immigration system.”

It’s not that border control has been tried and failed; it hasn’t been tried. Thanks to court decrees and congressional enactments, we don’t permit ourselves to quickly return minors from Central American countries, or to detain them for any significant period of time. They get released, along with the adults accompanying them.

The asylum process is broken. The initial so-called credible-fear interview to determine whether asylum-seekers get to the next step of the process approves almost all of them, even if they are unlikely ultimately to win asylum. In the meantime, they are waved into the country and probably never removed.

The migrants coming in increasing numbers realize that we are helpless to exclude them and, indeed, surrender to Border Patrol agents when they get here.

Congress could fix all this in an afternoon, with a few key changes in the law. Trump has a Nancy Pelosi problem much more than an Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador problem. But, since Pelosi is unmovable, Trump has to try to work the Mexican president.

The talk of cutting off the border isn’t aimed at the migrants, who largely don’t come through ports of entry, but at forcing the Mexican government to do more. Maybe the mere threat of the resulting economic disruption will work.

But if Trump goes through with closing the border, the strategy has some of the same weaknesses as the government shutdown earlier this year.

Where does it end? If Mexico doesn’t act quickly, how long are we going to keep the border closed? The longer it’s closed, the more pain will be felt in the U.S. economy at a time when there are already signs of softness. What if Mexico initially buckles, then backslides? Will we shut down the border again, or threaten to?

It’s insane that a sovereign country of unparalleled power has tied its own hands such that it must try to bully and cajole a foreign nation to do immigration enforcement for it.

In a more rational world, Congress would take seriously the spectacle of U.S. officials – and humanitarian organizations – scrambling to handle a flood of humanity showing up every day, and give them the legal authorities and resources to get the situation under control. That it won’t is a dereliction of duty of the highest order.

Well known fairy tale featuring a group of wrinkly-skinned toy dogs: “The Three Little Pugs.”

Strange BUT TRUE

By Samantha Weaver

• It was 19th-century French novelist Gustave Flaubert who made the following sage observation: “Our ignorance of history makes us libel our own times. People have always been like this.”

• Visitors to Chicago might want to keep in mind that in that city, it’s against the law to dine in any establishment that is on fire.

• In 1856, a soldier of fortune (who was also a journalist, doctor and lawyer) by the name of William Walker and his hand-picked group of mercenaries took over Nicaragua. Walker appointed himself dictator, thus securing for himself the distinction of being the only native-born American citizen to become head of state of a foreign nation.

• If you’re like the average American, you consumed more than 250 eggs last year.

• You might be surprised to learn that the giant bullfrogs of South Africa have sometimes been known to attack lions.

• If you like to go out and hit the greens on a nice summer day, you might want to consider this fact the next time you’re thinking about breaking out the irons and putters: More people are struck by lightning on golf courses than anywhere else.

• Mike Edwards, one of the founding members of the British band Electric Light Orchestra, met with an untimely death decades after he left the group. In 2010, as Edwards was driving in the rural southwest of England, a farmer lost control of a 1,300-pound bale of hay. This wheel-shaped bale rolled down a hill and over a hedge, and just happened to smash into the van Edwards was driving.

The NBA playoffs are about to start, and go on forever

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

The long NBA regular season comes to an end this week and the even-longer playoffs will follow.

Okay, okay, they may not really be “even-longer,” but it sure seems like it.

A whopping 16 teams make the playoffs, and unless you have no life and enjoy sitting in front of the TV for hours watching bad basketball, that’s way too many teams.

Anyway, with the season coming to a close, it’s a good time to take a look back at the year’s highlights and missteps.

As far as individual accolades, the league is going to have to choose an MVP. The consensus is that it’s a two-man race between Houston’s James Harden and Milwaukee’s Giannis Antetokounmpo.

Why is it that every time is see Giannis’ last name, I get the urge to ask someone if I can buy a vowel?

So who is going to win? Harden leads the league in scoring at over 36 points a game. Giannis is at just under 28.

Antetokounmpo is pulling down 12.5 rebounds a game, to Harden’s 6.5. Assists are fairly even with Harden at 7.6 and Giannis at 6.

The “Greek Freak” as they call him because it’s easier than saying “Antetokounmpo,” plays on the best team in the league – and that is usually the tiebreaker.

A couple other guys who should be in the running are on the same team. Oklahoma City’s Paul George and Russell Westbrook have had MVP-like seasons.

George is averaging 28 points, 8 rebounds and 4 assists. But the absolute best player in the game just might be Westbrook, who averages 23 points, 11 rebounds and over 10 assists.

Remember a time when it was an absolute certainty that no other player would ever average a triple-double (double figure points, rebounds and assists) for an entire season.

Oscar Robertson was the only player who had ever done it and that was back in 1962.

Well, Westbrook just accomplished that for the third straight year.

One of the biggest stories of the season concerns the guy who isn’t up for MVP – LeBron James.

James left Cleveland last season for the glitz and glamour of L.A. It was a given that James was going to lead the Lakers to the playoffs.

But once in a while, we’re reminded that the only real “given” in life is the inability to dribble a football.

LeBron’s new-look Lakers did the same old thing and suffered through yet another losing season, and for the first time in 13 years, James will be watching the playoffs from the comfort of his very expense couch.

So that brings us to the playoffs.

Even non-NBA followers know that the heavy favorites are the Golden State Warriors.

The Warriors have the best record in the West and start five legitimate all-stars. They’ve won three of the last four NBA titles and have two of the best players in the world (Kevin Durant and Stephen Curry).

It almost doesn’t seem fair. But this may be the most vulnerable that Golden State has been in a while.

The Warriors won’t have the best record in the league, which means they won’t have home court advantage throughout the playoffs.

They’ve lost some games this season in which they had big leads in the second half. It used to be that once they had you down, that was it. But the mental edge doesn’t seem as strong as it once was.

So who will threaten the Warriors?

The Milwaukee Bucks may have the best record in the league, but this is their first time as the big dog. Can they handle the pressure?

In the East, the Toronto Raptors, Philadelphia 76ers and Boston Celtics are the frontrunners to challenge the Warriors.

In the West, the Denver Nuggets and the Houston Rockets appear to be the biggest threat. But the Portland Trailblazers or the Utah Jazz could surprise everyone.

Even though they haven’t been as dominant as they have been over the last few years, the thought is that Golden State will just magically flip the switch and run over everyone in the playoffs.

I don’t know if it’ll be that easy. But I do know that with 16 teams in the playoffs, it’ll be a long while before we find out which one lands on top.

Medication doesn’t stop vertigo’s spinning

DEAR DR. ROACH: I have a terrible case of vertigo. I’m not sure what causes it or what I can do to prevent it from happening to me again. I was given two medications, promethazine for nausea and meclizine for vertigo, but still the problem persists. Can you offer some kind of help? – J.G.

Vertigo is the sensation of movement when not moving. Although it is classically described as a spinning sensation, some people feel as if they or the world is moving in other ways.

There are many causes of vertigo, but we generally break them down into two groups: peripheral causes, from the vestibular nerve, which connects your brain with the organ of balance in the inner ear; and central causes, from the brain itself. Peripheral causes are much more common and generally are labelled “benign,” even though they can be quite severe. Central causes are most commonly attributed to vestibular migraine and poor blood flow to the brainstem.

Only a careful exam and, occasionally, more sophisticated tests can reveal the underlying cause of the vertigo. The most common cause is benign paroxysmal positional vertigo, and I suspect that is what you were being treated for, having received a nonspecific treatment for vertigo. Although it is commonplace, I disagree with this treatment if it is used for more than a day or two, and then only in people whose symptoms are severe.

Most people get relief from an office treatment called the Epley maneuver. They can continue at home with other exercises. I would suggest that you ask your doctor about these procedures, and if he or she isn’t familiar with them, it might be wise to consult with an expert. In any event, vertigo is a symptom that can arise from several distinct medical conditions. You should find out what your diagnosis is.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I would like your opinion of taking a vitamin B complex capsule. A friend recommended it, but the dose of one to two capsules a day makes my urine turn bright-yellow. The daily values are from 3,000 to 8,000 percent, and that seems pretty high to me. I don’t enjoy taking it, because it smells and tastes unpleasant, but I’m mostly concerned about getting too much of a “good” thing. – R.W.

Here’s the good news: B vitamins are necessary, and your body is able to get rid of any excess. In fact, the yellow color of your urine is exactly that, your body spilling off the B vitamins you don’t need. There are a few medical conditions that benefit from B vitamins.

Here’s the not-so-good news: You almost certainly don’t need so much, and most people don’t benefit from taking vitamins at all. A healthy diet with lots of fruits and vegetables gives you most of the B vitamins your body needs. (Vitamin B-12, by contrast, is found only in animal products, which is why vegans require supplementary B-12.) If you choose to keep taking a vitamin just for general health, I would change to a brand that has lower doses and isn’t unpleasant to take.

I don’t recommend stopping megadose multivitamins suddenly. This is particularly important for vitamin C, where symptoms of deficiency can show up temporarily in people who suddenly stop high doses.

Stand Down events for homeless veterans begin

by Freddy Groves

As the weather warms up, the 2019 Stand Downs are getting underway.

Stand Downs are events held over one to three days for homeless veterans, usually at Department of Veterans Affairs medical facilities. The list of services provided is long and includes clothing, health and dental screenings, personal care supplies, haircuts, legal assistance, food, information about shelter, as well as VA and Social Security benefits counseling.

In addition, veterans can get referrals to care and treatment for substance use and mental health counseling, as well as employment help, health care and housing information. Multiple agencies and service groups come together for these Stand Downs.

To see the schedule of Stand Down events for this year, go online to www.va.gov/homeless/events.asp and scroll down. You’ll find the dates and locations as well as name, phone number and email for the point of contact. If you don’t see your location listed, keep checking back, or call the closest VA regional medical center. Ask early about whether they’ll have transportation, and sign up. Be sure to bring your VA medical card and DD-214 if you have them.

If you’re a homeless vet, there is another group you should contact: National Coalition for Homeless Veterans (www.nchv.org). If you’re in trouble (about to become homeless) call them 24/7 at 1-877-424-3838 or at 800-VET-HELP for general questions. NCHV also keeps a list of Stand Downs, so keep an eye on its website. It can help with housing, legal, employment and health issues, and more. Explore their website... they do a lot.

If you’re a member of a veteran service organization and want to help with a Stand Down, contact them and ask what you can do or bring. Transportation for veterans in rural areas, food and personal care items might be high on the list.
